

Sarah's... an Oasis for Women -- Volunteer Opportunities

At Sarah's there are opportunities for individuals to become more involved in the life of the house as well as support Sarah's through off-site work (fundraising and donation drives, for example).

At Sarah's, volunteers who work in the house must possess these qualities to some degree and have a willingness to work with others toward the development of these qualities:

- ability and willingness to relate with women of diverse backgrounds, language skills, appearances, and life experiences while respecting physical, life experience and emotional privacy
- commitment to Sarah's mission and ministry
- knowledge of CSJ mission and ministry
- good communication skills including ability to follow written and verbal directions
- ability to maintain resident confidentiality
- flexibility: allowing for change in oneself, in others, and in the environment
- self-awareness: ability to listen to feedback, recognize own potential and limitations, ability to express feelings/recognize and acknowledge others feelings, and good sense of humor
- energy and spirit of cooperation
- ability to be collaborative with and accountable to residents, staff, and other volunteers
- ability to meet the physical demands of the volunteer opportunity which may include lifting, bending, stooping, reaching, walking and standing for a period of time.

Volunteers are selected based on mutual expression of Sarah's needs and the individual volunteer's expectations, skills and strengths. Sarah's staff must be able to assure Sarah's women that their privacy and safety are being protected at all times. Volunteers are therefore expected to make a long-term commitment to on-site volunteer work.

The first step in the process of becoming a volunteer is to attend a tour and complete the volunteer application. Please contact Martha at 651-696-8672 or via email at communityrelations@sarahsoasis.org if you are interested.

Sarah's... an Oasis for Women is a home for women in transition. At Sarah's, boundaries, professionalism and confidentiality are critical. In addition to enacting the other values of Sarah's (simplicity, accountability, opportunity, possibility, beauty of our home and grounds, right relationships, healing and hope), we have the following behavior expectations of all staff, including volunteers:

- Responsibility- this includes being on time, following through with commitments and asking for help
- Strong communication- this includes appropriate use of voice mail, email, notes and conversations to convey facts, questions, concerns and clarification needed to address any problems in a timely manner
- Respect- this includes respectful words and actions including wearing appropriate attire
- Honoring diversity- this includes honoring and recognizing the differences and beauty in each individual's cultural, religious, language and other expression. Evangelizing, proselytizing, and using religious language and posting symbols specific to any one religion is prohibited.
- Show initiative- this includes seeing what needs to be done and doing it, trying to come up with solutions or find answers before asking for help, as well as sharing good ideas or new solutions to a problem.
- Flexibility and attitude of openness- this includes being willing to try new things, take on new challenges and staying calm under pressure. A sense of humor is helpful!
- Sharing lives and changing lives with boundaries- this includes being supportive and encouraging, developing relationships and friendships but keeping them professional. This does not include spending time with residents socially or developing anything other than professional relationships with staff and current or former residents.
- Positively representing Sarah's to the broader community and looking for ways to expand Sarah's reach and community knowledge of Sarah's.

The residents at Sarah's come from different; countries, cultures, and walks of life. Despite these differences, they share in common experiences such as; parenting, working, joy, and sorrow. These women are so much more than the trauma they have experienced. They are incredibly smart women! Volunteers are often surprised at the level of education or professional achievement that our residents have reached before coming here. Residents are really grateful to have you here! Below are some helpful hints as you get to know Sarah's residents.

1. Share about yourself, offer up information. Leave it open to the residents—you'll notice if someone wants to talk or not. Listen. Don't push it! Be okay with silence. Providing a ministry of presence means being present, not necessarily talking. Offer words of encouragement. Encourage their English use especially. Offer up personal experience BUT don't pretend to share their experience.

Example Conversation Starters:

- "I love to cook."
- "I'm from Wisconsin."
- "I grew up in the country."
- "I love to dance."
- "My granddaughter is 4 years old."
- "Wow! That's a big deal that you got your driver's license!"
- "It sounds like you work really hard."
- "Your English is great."
- "I understand you."
- "I studied Spanish and I was always so nervous to speak it but the more I spoke the better my Spanish became."

2. Volunteers are often seen as authority figures. The residents may feel obligated to answer any questions that you ask. Be aware of this and don't ask anything too personal. Don't ask questions about why they are here, their immigration status, the situation back home, etc. Even questions about kids or family can stir up difficult memories. If the resident offers up some information, feel free to ask about that, but it's best to leave it up to them. Don't make generalizations. Don't ask questions through the lens of assumption, "Were there animals roaming in your backyard?"

Example Questions you might ask:

- "How's your day going?"
- "What's your day/week looking like?"
- "Do you like work/school?"
- "What is your dream job/what would you love to learn about?"
- "Do you like (snow, rain, sunshine)?"
- "What's your favorite season?"
- "How is the weather here different than back home?"
- "What are you making?"
- "This food is delicious! Who made it?"
- "Do you like XYZ food?"

3. Holidays- Careful about assumptions! Share how you celebrate the holidays. Often, if you talk to the residents about your own traditions, they'll offer up something about theirs.

Examples:

- "Do you celebrate XYZ?"
- "How do you celebrate XYZ?"
